Muen San Temple

Wualai Walking Street

Wat Muen San temple is one of the ancient temples built in Prajoatilorakaraj's era and deeply connects with its people and Wualai community. The temple has many outstanding points of attractions that visitors can experience and learn more about Thailand's history. This place stores the ashes of Kruba Siwichai who is well known as the Buddhist saint of northern Thailand. A monument dedicated to Japanese soldiers is placed here as it used to be their shelter as well as a place to store weapons in the olden days. Not only that, this temple also has its own art museum decorated with modern Lanna art and every silver crafted artwork is made with respect and devotion from local people in the Wualai Community.

Sri Suphan Temple

Wualai Walking Street

We are inviting you to witness the magnificent silver ordination hall. It is considered to be the first silver hall in the world located in Wualai street. Sri Suphan temple was built in 1502 by Phrajaopilokpanadda (also known as Phramuengkaew). The silver ordination has been crafted for almost 8 years (currently 60% finish) with the power of faith by the locals and their strong beliefs to maintain Buddhism and conserve the silver craft in the local community.

If you are one of those people who are passionate about flowers, then “Queen Sirikit Botanic Garden” is a great attraction that you shouldn’t miss! Queen Sirikit Botanic Garden conserves Thailand’s valuable plant resource by planting them according to how they best grow in nature. The vast greenhouses up the hill not only provide a beautiful aesthetic to admire, but are also fundamental in providing these plants with an optimal environment for them to grow.

The main greenhouse is full of exotic plants and floras from tropical rain forests all around Asia. Much care has been given to recreate the area in a way that is similar to actual rainforest conditions. The greenhouses also have distinct plants such as desert plants, ferns, orchids and many more. Queen Sirikit Botanic Garden is great for a relaxing tour as well as for botanical education and research. If you are a nature lover, this place is a MUST SEE!
